

Medieval Drama Productions Present:
*A Very Medieval Christmas

By Dominique Saunders
Contributing Writer

17 Nov 2011

(In a cameo inspired by an anachronistic reference to "Saint Nicholas" In the original medieval text, the 2011 production features an appearance by the Jolly Old Elf himself! Here Sean Johnson rests from his labors in the role of Santa Claus. Image Credit: Curley 2011)

Medieval Drama Fun
Fact: The three gifts that the three shepherds give parallel the gifts given by the three Magi in symbolization. Progress is underway for English 312's production, "A Very Medieval Christmas." The play will take place on Friday, December 9th at 4:00 p.m. in the Chapel. Our production groups are working hard in order to allow the play to express its inherent humor without downplaying its religious significance.

Of course, that does not mean that the actors will also be speaking in incomprehensible Cockney-sounding Middle English to the audience for the sake of authenticity. As with Professor Fee's other productions, this production has been translated into Modern English (American) so that everyone will be able to enjoy the medieval-styled, slapstick comedy the play has to offer, because believe it or not, people of the middle ages were fond of their potty humor, especially their fart jokes. While King Herod certainly won't be letting off huge ones in the Chapel, thankfully, our production, nonetheless, will be entertaining and fun to watch for people of all majors, interests, and ages.